Practicing stewardship of our environment
These hands-on programs and projects are examples of how Noah’s Ark works with community partners to support children’s prosocial behavior development by:

• Building empathy and a sense that “you’re never too little to make a big difference”

• Helping children see themselves as capable of being helpers of others

• Practicing concrete skills of taking action: watch an example, do it yourself, then go out into the world and do more

• Spurring family discussion about building a better world: we create conditions in which to have conversations about important real world issues. In this environment, visitors practice family learning and build skills like stewardship, empathy and compassion.
